Lamentation

Choreography by MARTHA GRAHAM
Music: Neun Klavierstücke, Op.3, No. 2 by Zoltán Kodály
Costume Design by MARTHA GRAHAM

Premiere
January 8, 1930
Maxine Elliot’s Theatre
New York, NY

Dancer
NATASHA M. DIAMOND-WALKER

Lamentation premiered in New York City on January 8, 1930, at Maxine Elliot’s Theater, to music by the Hungarian composer Zoltán Kodály. The dance is performed almost entirely from a seated position, with the dancer encased in a tube of purple jersey. The diagonals and tensions formed by the dancer’s body struggling within the material create a moving sculpture, a portrait which presents the very essence of grief. The figure in this dance is neither human nor animal, neither male nor female: it is grief itself. According to Martha Graham, after one performance of the work she was visited by a woman in the audience who had recently seen her child killed in an accident. Viewing Lamentation enabled her to grieve, as she realized that “grief was a dignified and valid emotion and that I could yield to it without shame.”

Dancers step into the spotlight at City Center's 17th annual Fall for Dance Festival.

“Will I ever dance on stage again?”

That’s the big question facing dancers today. From being able to turn, travel, and fly across space to being forced to stand still and wait, dancers are in an odd form of stasis. But by their nature, they are resilient—adroit at changing speed and direction. And when given a chance, they make magic, create worlds, and relate what’s on stage to life at large.

That’s what makes this year’s Fall for Dance Festival unlike any other. For many of the artists—all homegrown talent exclusively based in New York—this will be the first time they get to perform on stage after several months. And as they continue to navigate the challenges of filling empty performance schedules and finding ways to keep moving, being able to finally dance for an audience again gives them the special opportunity to open their hearts and share how this period has shaped their artistry.

“The pieces in the 2020 Festival are like a snapshot of this moment in time,” said Stanford Makishi, Vice President of Programming at City Center. “Some works are introspective while others punctuate the programs with moments of joy. Together, they elevate the voices of today’s greatest artists and offer global audiences a unique and unifying experience.”

Continuing a Tradition of Commissioning New Works

As part of City Center’s ongoing commitment to support artists in the creation of new work, this year’s Festival includes world premiere City Center commissions from Kyle Abraham, Dormeshia, Jamar Roberts, and Christopher Wheeldon—four of the most adventurous voices in dance today.

For internationally renowned choreographer Christopher Wheeldon, this year’s Festival signals a turning point: “I’m extremely proud and honored to share the stage with so many esteemed artists. Being in City Center’s studios over the past couple of weeks and standing on stage fills me with great hope that we will all be back stronger than ever.”

Wheeldon’s piece titled The Two of Us, brings a felicitous pairing center stage as illustrious New York City Ballet principal dancer Sara Mearns, a familiar face to City Center audiences, joins American Ballet Theatre (ABT) principal dancer and incoming Artistic Director of The Australian Ballet David Hallberg.

How do these beloved stars feel about what will be their first and probably only ABT’s Calvin Royal III makes his debut as a principal dancer—the third Black dancer in the Company’s history to achieve this rank, after dance luminaries Desmond Richardson and Misty Copeland. He performs a solo by multi-award-winning choreographer Kyle Abraham, a frequent Fall for Dance artist. The synergy of this powerful collaboration brings an eye-opening look into how dance evolves and moves forward.

Dormeshia, “who no longer uses a last name—she’s tap dance royalty, she doesn’t need one” (The New York Times), marks her first featured performance at City Center with a piece that honors and pays homage to legendary Black women in dance who inspired and influenced her—Lois Bright, Harriet Browne, Cora LaRedd, Jeni LeGon, and Dianne “Lady Di” Walker, to name a few. Dormeshia’s performance comes hot on the heels of her success in the highly acclaimed And Still You Must Swing.

Fresh and Familiar Voices Pave the Way for the Future

For Martha Graham Dance Company’s Natasha M. Diamond-Walker being a part of this year’s Festival is momentous. “I’m the first woman of African American descent to perform this solo [Lamentation] here in America as a member of the Company,” said Diamond-Walker. “I feel like I’m representing the whole Company, but also humanity at the same time.”

Lar Lubovitch Dance Company guest artists Adrian Danchig-Waring and Joseph Gordon, New York City Ballet principal dancers and partners in real-life, share similar sentiments. “Returning to stage for this year’s Festival is an opportunity to contribute meaningfully—for the first time in months—to the city’s dance culture,” said Danchig-Waring. Together with Gordon, he performs the enduring and timely male duet from Concerto. Six Twenty-Two—one of the first responses to the AIDS crisis from the dance community. “Just being back in the studio is so incredibly healing,” said Gordon. “It’s like I’ve finally found land after spending months lost at sea. This pandemic has forced us all to reconsider our most basic human instincts, all of which are embedded within dance.”

Known for “piercing stereotypes” (The New York Times), Ballet Hispánico, a leading Latinx dance company opens this year’s Festival with their bold and eclectic style of contemporary dance, featuring Shelby Colona, Dandara Veiga, and Lenai Wilkerson. “Just the thought of stepping out onto a stage with my co-workers after six months fills me with so much peace,” said Colona.

And while performing without an audience in the theater might seem daunting for most artists, Colona believes that dance transcends physical boundaries: “People come to watch dance because it makes them feel something. They become a part of the experience and immerse themselves in another world. When you watch dance, it can be an escape from within your ‘four walls.’ That’s something everyone could use a bit of.”

Ballet icon Tiler Peck, who performs alongside Ashley Bouder and Brittany Pollack, was recently featured in City Center’s five-part Studio 5 | Great American Ballerinas series among other endeavors during her time off stage. For her, the Festival strengthens the feeling of connection and camaraderie between the dancers: “I love sharing the stage with so many talented and diverse artists, and although we cannot be in the wings cheering each other on like we usually are, I am honored to be dancing alongside them digitally this year.”

Leading up to the Festival’s opening night, City Center has pulled out all the stops to make what was a dream, a reality. To protect the artists, staff, and crew working to produce the Festival, City Center has been closely following guidelines from medical advisors including repeated COVID-19 testing for everyone involved. And with a herculean effort that involves hours of online meetings, conducting safe studio rehearsals, and creating new works via Zoom, City Center in partnership with Nel Shelby Productions is able to share the magic of live performance directly from its stage to you at home.

So while audiences cannot gather at City Center for this year’s Festival, the astounding display of artistry that celebrates the indomitable spirit of dance promises to bring inspiration and joy. “Dance in this moment in New York and the world is so important because it keeps dreams alive, it keeps the promise of a better future alive,” Mearns concluded. “It’s always been what’s healed my heart and my soul so I hope it can do the same for others right now.”

The 2020 Fall for Dance Festival premieres on October 21 (Program 1) and 26 (Program 2) at 7:30pm ET and is available to view on demand through November 1 for $15 per program. For more information and to purchase digital access, please visit NYCityCenter.org/FallforDance.

“As with most of what I have created as a choreographer, the dance is first and foremost an expression of the music—a way, one might say, of playing the music on the dancers’ bodies. I think of the choreography as an additional line of music, much as the voice is in opera, but in this case a visual line. However, that does not mean to say that it is without a specific dramatic context as well. In this case, it is intended as an essay on friendship. Mozart wrote his Concerto for Clarinet K.622 for a close friend who was a virtuoso clarinetist, though as a composer he did not, in fact, favor this instrument and rarely featured it. In 1985, when the dance was created, the AIDS epidemic was upon us and one of the emerging themes in this time of crisis was the depth of friendship expressed as friends helped friends to die. The dance essays the joyousness of the subject in its outer ensemble movements and its tenderness in the central adagio for two men.” —Lar Lubovitch
